

Q: NFL Commissioner Roger Goodell has volunteered to reduce his salary to $0 in response to the COVID-19 crisis. Has any consideration been given by board members and chief executive to voluntary reductions in compensation?

A: Yes, our Board and Compensation Committee are considering a variety of compensation actions to address the current situation.

Q: This company is so smart and innovative. It should be a "defensive stock" in this uncertain economic time (due to the virus). However what has happened to the stock price? The stock price is off almost 30% from 2018. Please explain. Thank you

A: We agree with you that Corning has entered this crisis financially strong and we'll come out the other side even stronger and ready to return to growth. We are taking actions in the near term to preserve our financial strength, and we are participating in this fight against the pandemic with many of our innovations. We are well positioned to outperform our markets when they return to growth. From a stock perspective, we would expect the value creation from the sales and earnings growth, as well as continued shareholder returns will be reflected in the stock price.
